

Arctic Duxbury: storm's aftermath is icy fury

The bay was frozen from one end of the Powder Point Bridge to the other on Saturday.

The ice holds a dock in place on frozen Blue Fish River.

Longtime Duxbury resident Steve Eames had never seen ice floes like this on Duxbury Bay. He was braving the cold to take some photos.

The wind was howling on the beach side, but there was one brave soul checking out the waves. Gurnet Light is in the distance.

Winds and temperatures were painfully cold on Saturday, but many birds remained huddled on frozen Blue Fish.

Photos by Karen Wong